Dont enter Stalingrad. Just level it with bombers and establish air superiority, as was done in the first phase of the attacks. Then, allow the soviets to keep occupying it only to be bombed into oblivion again and again; set up artillery and anti-tank guns in the mean time. Make sure the the southern oil fields get taken (by panzers), and focus on securing those, while building a fortified and well supplied front against the soviet counter attack that comes in winter. Also, make sure those pussy conscripts who were not German are not guarding your flanks, use them as fodder to the front if necessary. Keep scouts on the high grounds 'Mamayev Kurgan' and occupy the airfield. Use the scouts to watch for any replacements crossing the Volga river, and to zero them in for bombers and artillery.
in the summer and fall, have intel find Chuikov, and send in hit teams to specifically take him out, or zero in on him to the point where the explosions give him the shakes (PTSD); make him specifically feel as target, as the soviets are bug-people who need their commander.
The problem was occupying Stalingrad, as opposed to making Stalin pay in blood for holding it. The germans only lost because they occupied it and were flanked by a two-pronged deep-battle attack in the winter.

This is a question with far too many answers. But, as a start, reversing the target of purges in the Night of the Long Knives from the Rohm circles in the SA to the scheming, traitorous generals who were probably as feckless in that time as they later were in their cockamamey schemes like the Oster conspiracy or the Valkyrie plot; then, reforming the army as the Wehrmacht-SA with Rohm as defense minister and Kurt von Schleicher as a mediator to the bruised traditional officer class.

Merge the OTL mechanization and Schwerpunkt onto new elements of deep reserves, early implementation of civilian-paramilitary assets like Flakhelfer at least into theory, and the Total War idea conceived by Ludenddorff, who will receive a formal apology for being scorned over his uncompromisingly conspiratative rhetoric for electoral reasons and brought onto the main general staff.

Streamline everything. Force the military industrialists to dance to our tune. Follow the example of Erhard Milch in twisting the thumbscrews as tight as possible and being very strict about contract control. Get more, newer, better weapons, sooner, and don't fall behind for faulty ideas of thrift or conservatism. Invest in centimetric radar before the British, as was possible historically but snubbed. Get an intermediate cartridge.

Take serious inspiration from Tripartite Pact members' equipment; a knee mortar and/or shoot through rifle grenade system would be EXTREMELY useful, for one. Never rest on laurels; always be upgrading old equipment, always be swift to figure out the next generation of equipment to come after, but don't try to leap multiple generations ahead.

Pay attention to Altekampfer and center & left-party wing theorists like Gottfried Feder and Gregor Strasser, especially Scheubner-Richter if he's still alive. But keep them in line; bring them there like Goebbels was. Use them to get the economy locked down tight. Get Goering to kick morphine; he should still be used as an intentionally illiterate economic legbreaker and to form the Hermann-Goering Werke, but he'll be FAR more effective if he isn't drugged up to his eyeballs and is instead in the kind of tip-top shape that he was in as a Nuremberg defendant, rightfully viewed by the prosecutors as the most dangerous of all present.

Always be as conciliatory to the occupied as possible, earn and demand their collaboration all at once. Be lighter on the French armistice and get Petain into a proper defensive pact, one which will see Torch bring the French in as an actual Axis combatant, with their substantial navy intact. Don't be flighty about arming up Russians and native minorities; don't abandon the alliance with the Aufbau Vereinigung in the first place. Himmler can be informed, plainly, that good racial elements are good, and bad ones are bad, but having both on our side to shoot communists is great.

Tell the Japanese about Barbarossa to assuage their fears over Molotov-Ribbentrop. ONLY DO THIS IN PERSON, and ONLY TO THE HIGHEST COMMAND UNDER STRICTEST SECRECY, because Japans' codes are broken and they've got a Soviet mole or two. Get them to do Kantokuen and pin the Soviets east; this won't tie down too many forces that went West OTL, but it WILL keep Zhukov in the East and it WILL ruin the Vladivostok lend-lease route completely. If the Japanese start intercepting that shipping before they do Pearl Harbor, laugh as FDR struggles to justify his case entangling American lives with communist aid under fire by a power he's already provoking to the America Firsters. Laugh as the Soviet supply chain is strangled in its crib, and the alternative routes within your naval & air interception range become a turkey shoot.

Once the continental war is won; demoralize the British to death. Make an Edward-military-Mosley putsch inevitable. Plan to drown the Rothschilds' City of London and Wall Street with nerve gas from long range jets and rockets. Actually do so if necessary. Win. Build for round 2. Tear the USA a new asshole by getting bases in South American third position nations and supporting all manner of militant groups, bleeding them dry in failed anti-colonialist wars in Africa and Asia, and laughing as George Lincoln Rockwell wins electoral gangbusters, ruin their atomic MAD potential, and land boots on the ground to stabilize since you simply can't go in dry. Win again, and totally, and with finality.

If II recall, there were records of German 88 guns killing a hundred tanks, or more, and still getting overwhelmed. Of course, what they didn't know was that the Russians were taking the tanks that the Germans knocked out, rinsing them with water, patching the holes with a weld or paste, and sending them back onto the field.

Invading Russia WAS the mistake.
Then concentrating on Leningrad and pushing for Stalingrad while 16km from Moscow was mistake #2.
Even Stalin wasn't sure they would make it at that point, and was ready to evacuate the Kremlin.
Past 1942 Germans were doomed.
Mistake #3 was not allowing Patton to fight the Soviets, in which case the Red Army would have overrun the allies and wouldn't stop until Portugal.

Should have invested in a long range bomber to hit the lines of supply and manufacture further back.
Sure, lots of manufacturing plants were moved way out to the east, but there were plenty of train lines that could have been bombed at various points to further weaken defense at Stalingrad.
Incendiary bombs on Stalingrad itself would have also been better to clear more buildings (or destroy them outright), and to potentially hit the sewers which was how much of the Soviet force was getting around the city itself.

tl;dr: more supply line raids, ied's in sewers and firebombing campaigns

Take out Britain first, would have allowed more room for error, but it was still winable starting at the same conditions as it did, if only:
>strike south for caucasus, and take Russias oil (it is more important Russia not having it, than germans having it, so it matters less if soviets blow the fields)
>take Leningrad early for morale boost, possible use the Finnish idea to flood the city with diverted lake Ladoga >do not use foreign troops for combat duty, only for garrison and building fallback line fortifications and infrastructure, or at military factories >giving Italy Corsica and part of eastern France immediately for morale boost in North Africa, but do not send any armor there, and send it instead to the eastern front >give Bulgaria greek territories immediately, to get them to join Axis, and aid with garrison duties, and military production >taking all captured ships from France and Greece to Germany (instead of giving them to Italy, or letting France keep them), and move them all into the Black Sea, for covering supplies being sent through the Black Sea into the caucasus
>Do not rush for Stalingrad either, until caucasus is secured
>Once Caucasus was secured offer some of it to Turkey, in exchange for them letting troops and supplies pass through their land, so supplies would reach the troops from two directions + Black Sea >do not promise or give allies any weapons, because Germany needs it more, but do help to improve their military industries, so they can produce for themself, using their own manpower >do not convoy raid with German battleships in the atlantic, and North Sea, only use submarines >start deporting captured populations destined for displacement later (e.g. czechs, ukranians, poles) into French North Africa, and make the french feed them, brits might raid less supply convoys to avoid mixing up with civilian ships >Offer Franco some of France, and French North Africa immediately, so Spain guards it, and might join the war

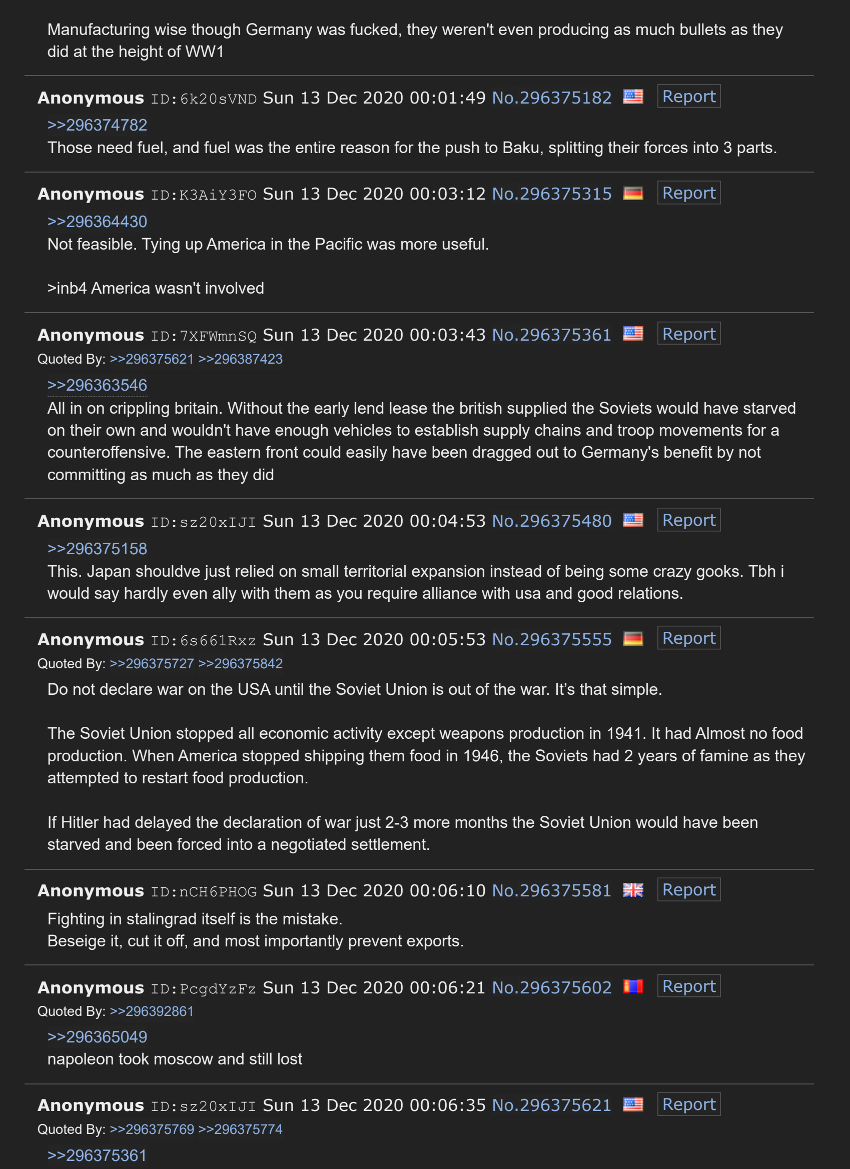
Guderian wanted to rush Moscow as quickly as possible with the tanks in the front and soldiers right behind Blitzkrieg style, the more status quo generals wanted to slowly push up along a wide front and take out as many russian armies as possible, they were afraid of overextending if they pushed for Moscow, also Hitler wanted to take out Russia's oil fields. Hitler went for the conventional approach and did slow push instead of pushing straight for Moscow because they were operating under the assumption that Russia's armies would collapse like in WW1 after Tannenberg.
Hitler gets alot of criticism but he was right about one thing, when the Russians counterattacked after the failure to take Moscow he told them to dig in on their supply depots like fortified hedgehogs, this probably saved the Germany army in 1941 from a rout and allowed them to do a counter-attack in the spring.



Manufacturing wise though Germany was fucked, they weren't even producing as much bullets as they did at the height of WW1

Do not declare war on the USA until the Soviet Union is out of the war. It's that simple.

The Soviet Union stopped all economic activity except weapons production in 1941. It had Almost no food production. When America stopped shipping them food in 1946, the Soviets had 2 years of famine as they attempted to restart food production.

If Hitler had delayed the declaration of war just 2-3 more months the Soviet Union would have been starved and been forced into a negotiated settlement.

The Generalplan Ost (German pronunciation: [genəˈʁaːlˌplaːn ˈɔst]; English: Master Plan for the East), abbreviated GPO, was the Nazi German government's plan for the genocide[1] and ethnic cleansing on a vast scale, and colonization of Central and Eastern Europe by Germans. It was to be undertaken in territories occupied by Germany during World War II. The plan was attempted during the war, resulting indirectly and directly in the deaths of millions by shootings, starvation, disease, extermination through labor, and genocide. But its full implementation was not considered practicable during the major military operations, and was prevented by Germany's defeat

The fact is both USSR and Germany would've been doomed without their Caucasian oil fields. Hitler knew that hence the original Barbarossa plan was to strike south.

It wasn't a mistake. It was a necessity. Germany was out of oil. The only way they could keep their industry functioning is if they took it from the Russians.

By not overextending in the battle of britain. Germany had air superiority in the early stages of the war which is why they were able to beat France who had a far superior amount of armored units and tanks. The Luftwaffe strafed them into obliteration because there was no air support. If the luftwaffe was still around in full force on the eastern front they would have destroyed the reds far easier than the French.

They simply misjudged the state of the USSR, If you go back in time and don't use any hindsight. The USSR looked to be on life support/a failing state with massive political and military purges, the infirm and embarrassing campaign in Finland etc. The Germans genuinely though that after a few big encirclements in Belarus and the Ukraine the USSR would just fall apart and they would walk to Moscow then win. But they found out within a couple months of the campaign this was not going to be the case and the Soviets were not going to give up. Even in the Ukraine within not even a month way more resistance was encountered then they ever anticipated. The general quartermaster of the Wehrmacht told Hitler/High Command that they could operate like no further then 500km deep into the USSR without massive supply issues. The Germans knew about all the risks and that they would hopelessly lose a protracted war in the USSR but they gambled and lost.

The only real way Germany would have been more successful is:
A) force Halder to take Baku before winter of 41, threaten a court marshal if he fails (Halder betrayed Hitler adn did his own plans instead of taking Baku as ordered).
B) After Baku is under Axis control repair the oil fields over the winter, and provide the troops with thick leather coats to prevent frost bite
C) by summer of 42 make Fall Blau for Moscow, taking Stalingrad on the way, and if that sucessful than make a final drive for Leningrad before winter of 42
D) If the USSR still can fight back by this point ofr the any previous objecitve failed admit deafet to the OKW, make Goering your heir in privet and kill yourself as ther eis no way to win after this point without nukes. If Russia cannto push back just drive to the Urals in the summer of 43, dig in the mountinas and focus entirely on nukes and ICBMS for the rest of the war.

That's an exaggeration. The Japanese made a good showing of themselves and exacted disproportionate casualties, in spite of their lower mechanization and standard of armament. The Soviets, just going by the Wiki sidebar, lost 50% more men, 25% more aircraft, 872% more tanks, plus 132 armored cars and 652 trucks to 2330 horses. The Soviets had twice the forces in manpower brought to bear, while Japan didn't escalate their commitment what they saw as a probing border conflict and didn't realize their error until it was too late to double down and win. And if Zhukov outright loses, Stalin might just kill himi. Not good for the Soviets long term.

Brazil would've actually been a great base for surface raiders and subs to stop off at, as well as a sizeable distraction for the USA. But Vargas betrayed his base, the Integralists and Brazilian Nazis failed to oust him, and he then proceeded to swing to the Allied camp, then take sides overtly when Hitler decided to go for Brazils' America-bound shipping.

No. The big rockets are important, and useful to a point. But more of what went to the vengeance weapons should have gone to air-to-air, surface-to-air, and guided rocket & missile projects. Leaner things with more knock-on effects. Earlier air-to-air means the light Bf109 interceptors can avoid bulged wing cannons and get their mobility back after dumping rocket racks; operational surface-to-air makes better use of resources than burst barrage flak, which should itself be axed in favor of direct fire fused flak as was trialed in the very late war successfully; smarter guided rockets will hit their targets better.

As for how to win the war, step 1 would be entering total war economy mode early just like GB and the rest and not waiting for the early to mid 40's to do it when it was too late. Step 2 would be taking a better loop at cryptography.

That's not true. You DID have a choice, a hard and self-sacrificial one; tell the USA to pound sand, and let FDR limp (technically roll) away or else fuck himself by turning Brazil into his very own Vietnam 20 years early, a war he cannot and will not win, and which Brazil itself does not NEED to 'win,' which will likely have serious knock-ons for the war in Europe and the Pacific.

It's not a choice anyone can ask you to have made from a materialist perspective, though the Tripartite Pact asked you from an ideological and idealist one, as well as their own pragmatic desire. Vargas' position was understandable in its timeframe, regrettable in retrospect. But the possibility exists for him hardening up the line and taking the black eye.

>they were too few and far between Granted, but so was everything.

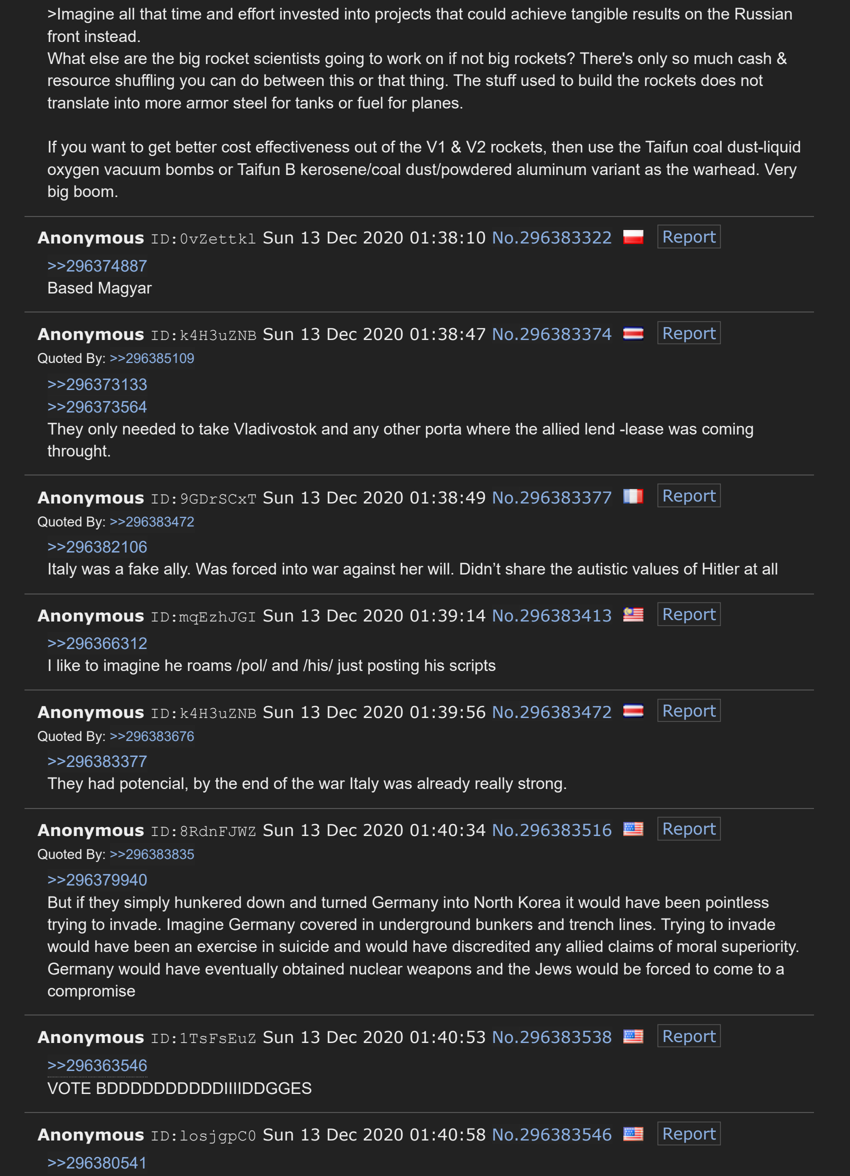
>the rockets often missed their targets
Double agent fuckery misinforming the calibrators will do that to you; blame Wilhelm Canaris being an incompetent, defeatist and outright traitor at points, who let the entire British spy network get flipped. Should've had Heydrich take on the job, but he died and Canaris' treachery wasn't noticed til Valkyrie. Well, at least not noticed outside Himmler.

>misfired
A problem, but one can work it.

>or didn't explode properly, or exploded mid-flight
Also problems. It sucks being on the bleeding edge.



>Imagine all that time and effort invested into projects that could achieve tangible results on the Russian front instead.
What else are the big rocket scientists going to work on if not big rockets? There's only so much cash & resource shuffling you can do between this or that thing. The stuff used to build the rockets does not translate into more armor steel for tanks or fuel for planes.

If you want to get better cost effectiveness out of the V1 & V2 rockets, then use the Taifun coal dust-liquid oxygen vacuum bombs or Taifun B kerosene/coal dust/powdered aluminum variant as the warhead. Very big boom.

If anyone thinks the Germans could in anyway have transported the oil anywhere is a fool. Not only did the Germans not possess nor would possess anytime the means to transport it, the Soviets would have 100% without a doubt blown up every single oil field if it was clear the Germans were going to seize them.

I mean, Moscow had only been the capital for about 20 years at that point, and by December 1941 Stalin had been operating out of Kyubishev for months.

Leningrad = ship supplies and unload directly onto the Soviet rail system without all the fuckery of the differing German and Russian gauges. Caucasus = all those T34s run out of fuel.

Yes they wanted lebensraum in the east but they weren’t going to completely genocide all non-Germans. Sterilization of undesirable groups, perhaps, but the alternative was to see Europe turn into a communist dystopia. They made the right choice.

Interesting. Those look way ahead of their time. It’s so frustrating to think Germany had everything going for it and through two world wars everything seemed to go wrong for them. It was the worst string of bad luck and geographic misfortune being at the center of Europe. Not to mention the confluence of historical factors which contributed to Russia falling to communism and Britain becoming a vassal state for Jews. Just overall such a shitty set of circumstances. >How much fuel did it take to fire one of those rockets do you think?
Well, the V1s used 'any grade of petroleum' and shitty one-flight valveless pulsejets, so they would only be even possibly infringing on the limited number of other jet aircraft (whose native era of supply troubles largely come on because of throughput loss AND the Allied bombing campaigns managing to get into Romania AND the Russians pressing close, and who would ideally be burning kerosene mixes) while the V2 ran on 75% alcohol-25% water colliding with pure liquid oxygen. So, as far as tanks, trucks & avgas using planes are concerned; NONE.

>How much fuel and aircraft were wasted during the Battle of Britain?
Lots, but that's another thing entirely.

>If they weren’t planning to invade Britain those rockets become a huge waste of assets.
If the plan is to engage in reprisal attacks for strategic bombing & to push the enemy to the bargaining table, they work great.

>They could have focused on building rocket artillery like the Katyusha used by the Soviets.
Those are solid fueled. And they built those; 15cm, 28/32cm, 21cm & 30cm Nebelwerfers. Different resource base to the V1 and V2s. They also directly cloned the Katyusha as the 8 cm Raketen-Vielfachwerfer, because the SS thought it was hot shit & wanted it and the Wehrmacht said 'no, nuh-uh!' as they often did, forcing outside procurement.

>Imagine the payload of the V1 used in rocket artillery on the eastern front and designed to be as accurate as possible.
There was an alternate timeline written about this that I skimmed once, 'Is Moscow Burning?' On the plus side, the rockets worked well and they got better and better since they could observe the results properly. On the minus side, Stalin brought his rocket men back from the gulag & started shooting buzz bombs back. Your mileage may vary as to the plausibility. V1s with Taifun warheads were considered IOTL, and then not explored. They could indeed do work.

Yes, well, Albert Speer in his self-fellating memoirs was quite convinced of the value of the Wasserfall program. I don't entirely disagree with him. I also think that it would be even easier to just fuse the 88mm guns for direct impacts and have time fusing be an afterthought, and just shoot the fucking bombers as they were doing in '45 from before the war even starts. Airbursts with mechanical fusing are vastly fucking wasteful and they were shocked when they worked out the math for how big a miss you'd get for even the slightest misadjustment at bombers' mission altitude.

But he built rocket engines. The Germans already had Katyusha-style rockets and the Nebelwerfer and all that, but they needed artillery rockets less because their regular artillery was unbelievably good (and Soviet artillery was notably awful).

The only lost opportunity I can think of that his team was working on was the Waterfall guided SAM, which might've done enough damage to Allied bombers to get them to call off the bombing offensive if they could get the guidance to work, which they were having serious trouble doing. But even that wouldn't have saved them on D-Day. It's likely that their only hope was a strategic weapon that would lead to an armistice with the Western Allies, so that's what they were trying to do.

Oho. Ohohoho. Yes, I'm sure it's just 'a dirty bomb' that they had on hand. Yes, one wonders indeed where the failing Manhattan Project got all that uranium and those precise photo-fuses, and the actually working uranium gun bombs after they wasted all that money and effort on Thin Man. How strange it is that the German nuclear scientists were such failures and stooges and got it all wrong, right until they were giving speeches and having prison chats right after wars' end that had the numbers down just right, without any Anglo-Americans letting them in on those numbers.

Schwerer Gustav? They were used. Blew up a huge underground magazine in Sevastopol, among other things. They also had at least one Soviet spy operating in Hitler's inner circle, who Gehlen thought was probably Bormann, and of course the ULTRA program in the UK had broken their super-sekrit codes, which the Germans never even suspected. Having a traitor admiral in charge of military intelligence didn't help either.

It probably was 2bh, but people forget that a "dirty bomb" is "anything under 1.1 kilotons". They were never going to fit a Little Boy onto the nose of a V-2, so a dirty bomb makes a lot more sense.

A 0.8 kt dirty bomb exploding over your city is still 800 TONS of TNT exploding right overhead. It will annihilate five or six city blocks and everyone inside them, and set a bunch more on fire. If that was happening every hour or two, that might have done the trick.

That is simply not strictly true. When it comes to high level howitzers, the Soviets had the firm advantage; the Immergrun was outmatched by the 122 and 152mm guns. The Soviet 76mm field gun was great in its advent and quite serviceable later as a dual purpose anti-tank and shallow angle indirect fire weapon, and the Germans very eventually decided they wanted to turn the PaK 40 into a higher performing semi-equivalent; this resulted in the 7.5 cm FK 7M85, a PaK 40 on LefH 18/40 carriage, as well as the FK 7M59, a simpler modification that simply hacked the middle gunshield out of the existing PaK 40 carriage to get 35 degrees of elevation. They also had very desirable heavy mortars.

If you're talking gunnery drills, you may be correct, I cannot say. Probably correct on the level of medium non-field guns, of which the Soviets were kicking around a lot of obsolete shit to my knowledge. But the Soviets, as far as new production, had great GUNS, and the Germans had trouble with mediocre interwar-born artillery systems that they struggled hard to transition away from to newer ones.

The best part is that the "history" of how it all started is an absolute lie. It turns out when the Germans captured Warsaw, they captured the Foreign Ministry before they could burn their papers.

What they found was hundreds of cables between the Roosevelt government and the Poles, promising them basically unlimited material and eventually military aid if they could start a war with Germany. And cables from the British and French governments desperately demanding to know why the fuck the Poles were provoking the Germans and to stop right away. FDR played those guys like fiddles. Once German troops crossed the border, England and France were at war whether they wanted to be or not.

The Germans gleefully published it all as the German White Book. FDR denied everything, and in the pre-Watergate, pre-Iraq days people believed their government.

In the 1960s the former Polish ambassador to the US confirmed that it was all true. But none of it's gotten into any history books and never will.

Interesting post and fair points. I still think focusing on Britain was a waste of time and resources since an invasion of Britain was never a real possibility. What the Germans should have done was save the fuel and aircraft spent during the Battle of Britain which really only served as a distraction from the main confrontation taking place in the East. Firing V1s at civilians doesn't win you much sympathy in the eyes of your enemies either. Arguably it had the opposite of its intended effect by making the idiots in charge like Churchill more steadfast. If I recall correctly, Churchill at one point threatened to retaliate by dropping anthrax bombs on the Germans even after saturation bombing of German cities. Take the design for the V1 rockets and reengineer them for use on the eastern front. Hurl them at the the oil fields and/or Moscow. Save your fighter and bomber planes for when they're really needed. And make sure you defend the French coastline properly.

It's far worse. They actually committed to massive anthrax bombing of Germany -- it was called Operation Vegetarian and the only reason it didn't happen was that by the time they'd bred enough anthrax to be operationally deployable, Allied troops were in Germany and would've been killed by it too. That's all that stopped what would've been a massive biological weapons attack that would've killed millions.

And leave Britain to act as it pleases in the air over Europe? I suppose an argument could be made for an inverse Battle of Britain, in which Churchill is baited into wasting the remaining creme de la creme of the nascent Royal Air Force in a pissing match over France. Lose its pilots the way the Germans lost theirs, while the Germans keep their own the way the British did; by bailing out over their own territory.

I say, wage the Battle smarter anyways, with the right planes for the job. Get the Fw-187 twin engine air superiority fighter in production and bounce the bastards, pin them to their airfields. Stick to cratering them, don't get into a civilian bombing pissing match. Bleed Britains' ability to actually take off white, the same as the Germans were late in the air war over Europe.

>Churchill at one point threatened to retaliate by dropping anthrax bombs on the Germans even after saturation bombing of German cities.
Operation Vegetarian. Not bombs, more insidious. He wanted to drop anthrax laced cattle cakes, kill every cow in Europe, poison every pasture. Would starve more than just the Germans. He also repeatedly demanded the use of poison gas in drunken stupor, at various points.

The main guy in charge of code breaking for the British ended up committing suicide after the war. I wonder if it was because he regretted his actions in helping to destroy Germant and Europe after realizing the endgame. One of Winston Churchill's daughters also commit suicide after the war. She had been married to and later divorced a conservative MP who had been campaigning to keep Rhodesia as a British colony. Winston is burning on a rotisserie in hell somewhere like Dante's inferno, I'm sure of it

Lose its pilots the way the Germans lost theirs, while the Germans keep their own the way the British did; by bailing out over their own territory.

Exactly, and German pilots have a much stronger tactical advantage on their home turf (being superior pilots) and don't have the fuel disadvantage.

Nah, once his usefulness expired he was immediately arrested for homosexuality, tried without a legal defense, convicted, and given the option of either prison or chemical castration. He took the shots, which made him grow tits and become impotent. The conviction meant he couldn't travel, so he was left with a ruined career, a dick that didn't work, and basically being made a prisoner in his own country, so he killed himself

I pray. Literally the only thing that stopped Operation Vegetarian was that it took so long to make the weapons that Germany had mostly been overrun by then. We're talking an unprovoked biological attack that would've killed millions.

The only way to defeat the ussr would have been to push as deep inside it as possible in order to deny the ussr its most valuable resource: manpiwer. Once their manpower is depleted the war would be won. The best idea would have been to use the dividions in the north to go through tver and then further to the south east instead of sieging the city,thus surrounding moscow instead of leningrad while army group centre and south oush towards penza,saratov and even samara,thus reaching the volga albeit further to the north than in our timeline. Then army group centre/south and north would meet in gorki and complete the encirclement of moscow after having captured 10-15 million more soviet citizens in the penza,saratov and samara regions. This plus having encircled moscow would have led to the collapse of the ussr...but the volga plateau is HUGE so im nkt sure they could have made it

But I wonder if that just compounded The negative feelings he had seeing the fruits of his handiwork and the lack of gratitude after the war. He thought he was going to be a hero but instead his life just deteriorated and he realised, like Churchill must have realized during his political campaign to “keep Britain white” that he had been massively deceived about the nature of the war. With Churchill it’s inexcusable but with Turing it seems plausible

Maybe -- I think most Brits were overjoyed to have "won" the war. When Churchill realized he'd destroyed the British Empire and turned the UK into a vassal state of the US, he didn't really share it with anyone. I'm trying to remember the conference, Churchill was trying to swing his dick around and the American envoy flatly told him that he'd do as he was told, or no Marshall funds were coming his way.

It is a matter of some cheer that I'll live to see Churchill's statue torn down, since the majority population of London remembers him as a genocidal maniac who dropped nerve gas on Iraq, administered the Bengal Famine, and hopefully we can sneak Operation Vegetarian in there

https://www.thevintagenews.com/2018/01/10/operation-vegetarian/

He literally ordered a 5-million-cake anthrax drop all over Germany, and the only reason it didn't happen was the American advance through Europe was so fast. Churchill wanted to kill millions of civilians in a truly fucked-up, biological way, a war crime on a massive scale. The island they tested the anthrax cakes on was uninhabitable until the 1980s.

I hope he's boiling in pig shit for all eternity.

Do you have any books to recommend which give a psychological profile of Winston Churchill? Was he a psychopath? Was he insane? Was he just misguided? Was he blackmailed? Does anyone have an adequate explanation for why he did what he did. Keep in mind this was immediately after writing his book “A history of the English speaking peoples”. If Churchill knew anything about his own country’s history he should have known that Germany was not his enemy. I guess it was the experience of WWI which made him see the Germans as eternal enemies in a schoolchild sort of way. As with everything else, the devil is in the detail. I suspect he was out of his depth and couldn’t admit it to himself. God help us all.

He really really really really really hated Germans

He was the Best Goy, so he still gets only the greatest press. A visionary! A courageous leader! Ignore the vicious alcoholism and gambling debts! Or, how after he graciously allowed elections that he had forbidden during the war, the British public rewarded The Savior Of The Empire by immediately voting him out.

it is only as London gets browner that I think we'll start to see more realistic appraisals of the guy, more of the "genocidal drunk" type.

Germany pushed as far as they could go. Their logistics was 600k horses pulling wagons it gave the Germans a logistics stretch of 500 miles from Germany. That's as far as they got both campaign seasons, which is as far as Germany or half way to Baku. Germany just couldn't take Moscow or reach the oil fields.

Germany was never going to win the eastern Front

Purely on an operational level, here’s what I can come up with
In the north go east of Lake Ilmen with PG4 and as much of AGN as possible, aiming for the Svir and the Finns. Reach the Svir and Leningrad and every division west of the strike is doomed, no Road of Life on Ladoga because Ladoga is 50+ miles west of where the cordon is being made. Hopefully get at least some Finnish commitment south of the Svir this way, all they need to do is hold a line as AGN cleans up a Kiev sized pocket.

Speaking of, if you put me in June 22 and say “go,” I’d assume the Kiev pocket is impossible. The fact that it happened is an indictment on Stalin's disconnection from reality in 1941, and it was in no way a mistake on the Germans' part. That leaves precious little room for altering the plan in the center and south in 1941, so unless the drive on Svir is easier than expected and PG4 can be redirected south early, there's no Moscow in the cards in 1941. Hopefully with Leningrad out of the picture the Finns will help during winter, marginally reducing the strain on the Wehrmacht. 42 is the last chance for a win, and I'll go with an all out drive on Stalingrad as my best gamble. Take the city and I can turn south to the Caucasus, or north to exploit the wonderful tank country. As long as the armor remains uncommitted there's a threat that a couple Soviet armies may just vanish in a pocket. Destroying the Red Army is the only way to win, the industry will just keep moving East. Maybe if you capture all the major cities manpower becomes a serious bottleneck, and maybe taking the Caucasus will cause a serious problem that can't be fixed by lend lease, but nothing's certain. Keep an open mind, look for opportunities to destroy bits and pieces of the Red Army, fight the defensive war of movement that the panzer generals wanted, and pray that the Soviets can't match the casualties such a strategy inflicts.

I think he was a bloodthirsty, drunk monster and a fool. Every one of his big leadership ideas, from Gallipoli in WW2 to No Peace With Germany to "Let's invade Italy, this literal mountain range that runs down into the Mediterranean is the Soft Underbelly of Europe," was a blood-soaked disaster, and the only thing that stopped him from literally perpetrating the world's first bioweapon genocide was that it took to long to breed the biological weapons

And all in the service of reducing the UK to a burnt-out, bombed-out husk of a former Empire, occupied in all but name by a former colony.

He was legendary for gambling losses, so I'm sure some debts were paid.

In an ideal work, get Japan to put pressure in machuria. But that was never going to happen.

Dont rush to Stalingrad. Just keep pressure up while army group is taking oil fields.

Either put more pressure on Leningrad to capture it or expect that they will reinforce the city through winter on the lake and counter.

Prepare vehicule equiment and all sorts of gear for the shittiest winter in the last 200 years.
(This alone woukd have won germany the war)

Get the slavs from conquered territory to participate instead of slaughtering them. A shit ton of them hated stalin. But then Nazis and SS just start purging them. And between a choice of 2 dictators, they chose the one that spoke their language.

Start operation Barbarossa slightly earlier in the year so you get more time before winter hits.

Taking Moscow is huge blow, but go with the logic that this will NOT end the war. THey will keep fighting in guerilla type warfare past the urals for years if they have to.

Have Romanians, Italians, Bulgarians and Hungarian participate in a unified form of training to get their generals and troops to a slightly better level of operation.

Tanks are great but Most of Russia will be shitty back roads that can't handle super heavy tanks.

Go for fast and mobile and keep a lot of anti tank guns for those t-34. Make tanks highly customizable while still retaining all the same pieces. Streamlining is the idea here. You have to be able to repair and modify tanks for new purposes with relative ease. Making weird models that have no parts if a waste of time and ressources.

Invest a bit more in submarines and make sure to deny super hard those convoys in the north.
